

We've Come a Long Way, Maybe?

Emily Seto, University of Toronto
Michael Li, Vancouver Coastal Health
Julia Zarb, University of Toronto
Sam Gharbi, Vancouver Coastal Health

Physicians are widely involved yet there is a lack of cohesion in our systemic strategy that would ensure the transfer of knowledge and engagement from point-to-point.

Have we progressed (or not) in physician involvement in the health informatics continuum?

Split accountabilities and multi-perspective assumptions fragment the opportunity for a collective clinical voice.

Should clinicians be driving evaluation of systems from selection through implementation?

A potential exists for a framework of evaluation that spans end-to-end, integrates multiple voices, enables knowledge transfer, and both enhances and measures efficacy.

How can we change clinician involvement in the health IT cycle to enhance adoption?

